Jermyn man chosen for training program at Tobyhanna Depot

Joseph Oldakoski of Jermyn was among six employees of the Tobyhanna Army Depot who were recently selected for the depot's electronics-mechanic apprentice training program.

The depot's electronics-mechanic apprentice program is the first in the Army. It is fully certified by the U.S. Department of Labor.

The new class is the fifth since the program started in 1978. Training started October 31, and will continue for the next four years, featuring both classroom and on-the-job instruction. During on-the-job training, the apprentices will undergo rotational assignments in all of the electronic shops of the depot's Directorate for Maintenance.

Three new apprentices were selected from 174 original applicants. Since its introduction in 1978, 30 employees have enrolled in the electronics-mechanic apprentice program.

There now are 28 graduates of the program, another 15 are currently enrolled and seven have left the program.

Nine graduates are women and two women are apprentices.

The graduates are progressing well in their careers, said Les Davis, the apprentice program coordinator. Several have earned promotions and others are in positions with promotion potential. Four graduates serve on the apprentice committee and most graduates serve as apprentice instructors.

In addition to the electronics-mechanic training, the depot also conducts apprentice training in several other industrial trades and skills.

Bob Ashby renovates gas station

By MIKE PETROVSKY

In a town like Carbondale any type of construction is bound to raise the curiosity of passers by. So construction work being done at Ashby's ARCO Station, Main St., and Lincoln Ave., is no exception.

Robert Ashby recently purchased the station he had been leasing from the Atlantic Richfield Company for the past nine years and will soon carry Sunoco products. He said that ARCO is selling its smaller service Stations on the east coast because the California-based company is pooling their interests into their current project, the AM PM Mini Market self-service gasoline stations. Two years ago ARCO conducted a feasability study and found that the location of the Robert Ashby's station was ideal for an AM PM store. However, those plans were rejected because self-service stations are prohibited in the city.

Ashby's decision to go with Sunoco came after he met with representatives of other major oil companies. He chose Sunoco because he felt they offered the best deal for his customers. He was impressed by the company's four brands of unleaded gasoline and by the fact that Sunoco doesn't charge customers extra for using their credit card. Most other company's tack on a service charge making a credit card purchase.

The Greenfield Terrace Company, a local contracting firm owned by Edward Krantz, was hired to make the renovations to the station for the changeover. Some of the work being done includes laying forms and pouring concrete to serve as the base for the gasoline pumps. The new base is required to accommodate special adaptors for Sunoco pumps which dispense both high grade and economy unleaded fuel from the same hose. The base will also serve as a platform for a canopy Ashby plans to install over the pump area next summer. The contractors also have excavated two underground metal gasoline storage tanks which, according to Ashby, were replaced five years ago by fiberglass tanks which won't rust or leak.

Fate of Morrison's business rests with judge

By MIKE PETROVSKY

Can Morrison's restaurant, 36 and 38 Pike St., legally exist in a two family residential district? That is what Lackawanna County Court Judge Edwin M. Kosik would like to determine and to help him make that decision he ordered a special public hearing of the city's Zoning Board on Thursday, December 29. Judge Kosik, who did not attend the hearing, will use the transcripts to decide the case of Wade vs. the Zoning Hearing Board.

On February 15, 1983 the Zoning Hearing board, at a public hearing, granted William Morrison, 39 Pike St., a variance to expand his catering business in a residential area. Since no written transcript from the hearing exists, Judge Kosik ordered a special hearing on the Morrison variance. A court stenographer recorded Thursday's events and swore in those who presented testimony relating to the variance.

It was revealed at the hearing that opposition to the variance was voiced at the February 15 hearing by James H. Baker, 22 Copeland Ave., who came to the hearing to represent Frank and Sharon Wade, 42 Pike St., - husband and wife plaintiffs who were unable to attend. Both John Cardamone, the acting president, and only person now serving on the Board, and Frank Quinn, testified under oath that Baker, (Sharon Wade's father), attended the February hearing and stated that he and the Wades were opposed to the variance. Quinn, who was subpoened by Kosik to attend Thursday's meeting, stated further that the hearing ended with an argument between Baker and William Morrison. The Wades live next door to Morrison's restaurant and are opposed to the variance because it is their understanding that a restaurant and bar cannot operate in a R2 zone (two family residential).

At the special hearing Sharon Wade testified that both she and her husband had no objection when Morrison first opened his catering hall but they did object when he expanded his business to include a bar and restaurant. Mrs. Wade said that since then she and her husband have had to put up with the noise from bands playing at Morrison's until 1:40 a.m., and increase in the amount of garbage from the restaurant which she said overflows from the dumpsters and attracts rats, an increase in the number of cars parked outside their home, an increase in the amount of traffic on Pike St., a decrease in the property value of their home and no fire wall between their property and the restaurant.

Mrs. Wade further stated that Morrison's parking lot begins less than 10 feet from her property which according to Mrs. Wade violates the zoning code and that Morrison is planning on making another parking lot for his customers on land he purchased on the other side of her property. "I am sandwiched between a bar and a parking lot," Mrs. Wade said.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur LaPage, 28 Pike St., - whose property borders Morrison's catering on the other side testified that they too were opposed to the variance and that they also had to put up with the loud noise, the lack of a firewall, the devaluation of their property and the parking lot has caused poor drainage on her property and presented a photograph as evidance of the erosion which has occurred on her property as a result of the water run-off from the parking lot. Mrs. LaPage also presented photos of men drinking beer in the parking lot.

William Morrison testified in response to the objections made by the Wade and the LaPages in part by saying that bands have played at his establishement twice and that both times they were brought in by the groups who were using the catering facility. Morrison said he does not hire bands to play at the restaurant.

As for the parking lot he wants to put on the other side of the Wades' property, Morrison said the lot would be used by tenants living in the apartments he owns which are attached to the restaurant because parking isn't allowed on Pike St. As for the fire wall, Morrison said he asked Mr. LaPage if he wanted him the erect a fence or plant trees between the restaurant and LaPages' property. As for the drainage problem, Morrison said he will correct the problem when the weather gets better.

Morrison's attorney, Charles H. Welis, called on eight neighbors who came to the hearing to testify on behalf of the restaurant owner. They testified that since the catering hall became a restaurant they have noticed no significant change in traffic on Pike St., no increase in the rodent population and they all said the area around the restaurant was clean and that it was an asset to the neighborhood.

The attorneys for Wades and LaPages also brought out that none of the neighbors who testified lived as close to the restaurant as do the Wades or the LaPages.

After the hearing the NEWS spoke with attorneys Welles and Carey about the variance. Welles said that he interprets the variance to mean that his client can operate a restaurant and bar in the neighborhood. Carey told the NEWS that the variance is so vaguely worded that Morrison can do anything he wants to the property. However, it is Carey's contention that the variance itself is illegal because he interprets the city's zoning laws as saying that a restaurant and bar cannot be granted a variance in a two family residential zone.

Carey speculated that a possible solution would be to have Morrison buy Wade's property. When asked if the Wades would be willing to move, Carey said, "If the restaurant is still there, they'll have no other alternative."
